Scotland votes for independent parliament

Illustration by Justin Kunz

KHIRSTIN WHITE
Universe Staff Writer

Scotland made history Thursday. Breaking three centuries of tradition, Scotland held a nationwide referendum to create an independent Parliament.

According to the British Broadcasting Company, Scottish referendum results indicated that 79 percent of Scottish voters agree there should be a Scottish Parliament, while 21 percent oppose the proposal.

British Prime Minister and New Labour Party Leader Tony Blair was honoring the pledge he made earlier this year to set up a referendum for Scotland's independence if his party was elected.

As Scots headed for the polling stations, Blair encouraged them "to trust themselves and vote for a new and modern settlement for Scotland."

Voting to separate itself from the mother country represents the growing dissatisfaction Scots hold toward England. It also set the stage for action from Wales, which scheduled its own referendum for Sept. 18, 1997.

"There has been an underground feeling of nationalism in both Scotland and Wales for a long time. I think this is a means of diffusing it, that the New Labour Party Prime Minister is trying out. I hope he is successful because a frustrated nationalist fervor will lead to violence. I suspect that this is his [Tony Blair's] hope, that he will quash the fervent nationalist feelings in both countries," said Welsh Professor Noel Owen, of the BYU Chemistry Department.

There are perceptions that this will do more than appease nationalism of the Scots. "The eyes of the world are upon us, waiting to see if we have the vision and the confidence in ourselves to cast a 'Yes-Yes' vote for Scotland," said Donald Dewar, Scottish secretary in Blair's Cabinet.

If the "eyes of the world" are upon Scotland, much will need to be considered in light of the United Kingdom's future.

"The advantages of devolution are short-term for Scotland," said Robert Bradshaw, a visiting instructor of British Government and Politics. "They are seeking a very limited form of devolution, not total independence. Many people feel this will lead to total autonomy, but it is only the first step down a slippery slope toward total independence. This is ultimately damaging as the British government becomes diluted and we are left with a little state of England carrying little clout."

British conservatives handed out "Think Twice Or Pay The Price" leaflets along Edinburgh's main shopping district to discourage Scots from rushing into independence.

"You are not talking about some carefully worked out federal structure," said Michael Ancram, the conservative lawmaker leading opposition to the Scottish and Welsh Assemblies. "You are talking about piecemeal devolution...loosen the knots and eventually the parcel itself falls apart."

It seems Scottish voters were not dissuaded. "Scotland stands ready to take an historic decision. We must take it together," Dewar said.

This day has been long in coming according to Bradley James, a Scottish BYU student. "I feel [the Scots] will grasp this with both hands and run with it. I think it will be a proud day for the people of Scotland. With a Scottish Parliament, the Scottish people will have a better voice and be able to choose better for themselves what they want."

The referendum raised another question as to whether the new Scottish Parliament should have tax-raising power. Further BBC reports show 68 percent of the population are in favor while 32 percent are not.

Voter turnout has already exceeded that of 1979 when Scotland had its first chance at gaining political independence. Home rule is inevitable 18 years later. Scotland is asserting itself as an autonomous nation.

Academic freedom of BYU to be subject of article

NewsNet Services

BYU's academic freedom will be the topic of an article to be published Monday in Academe, the magazine of the American Association of University Professors.

Interest in BYU's academic freedom stems from an investigation conducted in January by a national team from the American Association of University Professors after Gail Turley Houston, former assistant professor of English, was dismissed by BYU. Local and national association representatives met on campus with BYU faculty representatives to appraise the university's academic freedom policy and whether Houston's academic freedom was violated. The university was happy to welcome the AAUP to campus and cooperated with them during their visit.

Results of Academe's article will be available to the public Monday morning on the Internet site for BYU's NewsNet at <http://newsnet.byu.edu>.

NewsNet, the integrated newsroom which features The Daily Universe, KBYU TV News at 4:30 p.m. and KBYU FM will have results of the report Monday.

BYU's response will be available Monday on the Internet at www.byu.edu/response, at each college dean's office and in the Harold B. Lee Library Reserve Reading Room.

LDS leaders free from subpoena

Associated Press

ROTON, W. Va. — A state Supreme Court decision will allow a woman who says she was sexually abused by LDS leaders to sue them without a subpoena.

The lawsuit, filed in 1994, was dismissed by the state Supreme Court last week. The court ruled that the church's internal disciplinary process was sufficient to protect its spiritual leaders.

The woman, who is now 25, faces a $750 million lawsuit. She says she was sexually abused by LDS leaders in 1989 and 1994. The church has denied the allegations.

The woman's lawyers originally tried to subpoena church President Gordon B. Hinckley and sought any evidence of church settlements in abuse cases from 1895 to the present.

alter the facts of this case — that a precious child suffered the results of sexual abuse," said Patrick Nance, the woman's attorney.

"Even worse is the attempt of the grown-ups to suppress this abuse," Nance said. "Not even the first amendment protects a church from this kind of conduct."

The lawsuit said Adams discussed the abuse with three church members and that national leaders failed to instruct West Virginia church officials on how to deal with it.

State law requires clergy, teachers and health care providers to report suspected child abuse to authorities.

The LDS Church has denied the allegations.

Churches in Utah are joining to form an organization of which the LDS Church is not a part. The group will be called The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Utah, and the group will meet Thursday at the Salt Lake City LDS Temple.

The group emphasized that it is an ecumenical or cooperative group that has a common history, doctrine and scriptural base that the LDS Church does not share.

speak for the community. This will be that voice," said Rev. Marvin Groote, executive presbyter of the Presbyterian Church.

Rev. John Ellis of the American Baptist Church added, "If [the LDS Church] were a part, it would just be more words by the same voice."

Laundry Solution maker settles out of court

By KATELYN HANDY SHRIBER
Associate News Editor

TradeNet Marketing Inc., a multi-level marketing firm that has been under investigation by the Utah Division of Consumer Protection for deceptive sales practices, has agreed to settle the matter out of court.

Under the agreement, TradeNet paid the division a fine of $10,000.

TradeNet distributes the Laundry Solution, a plastic molded ball filled with blue water, which the company claims cleans your laundry without the aid of detergent.

Through the investigation, the division found TradeNet to be violating the Utah Consumer Sales Practices Act through misrepresenting the benefits of its product. The division charged TradeNet in July with deceptive sales practices.

TradeNet was scheduled to go to court today.

The settlement also states that TradeNet will voluntarily cease from any business practice that violates the Utah Consumer Sales Practices Act, and that it will publish a newspaper advertisement to provide information about a refund or exchange for consumers who bought the Laundry Solution before the settlement.

TradeNet was contacted but declined to comment.

TradeNet claims that the Laundry Solution cleans clothes through a confidentially patented process. According to TradeNet, this process works through electromagnetivity; dirt is positively charged, and the Laundry Solution is negatively charged, creating an electronic release of dirt. TradeNet claims this is a chemical-free process, thus safer for the environment.

Francine Giani, director of the Division of Consumer Protection, became aware of the Laundry Solution through consumers who questioned the validity of TradeNet's claims.

Illustration by Justin Kunz

Giani sent the globes to be tested at the Physics Department at the University of Utah and a chemical lab in Salt Lake City, San Raphael Chemical Services.

Both found there was nothing abnormal about the globe or its claims to electromagnetivity.

According to its report, San Raphael found the claims that all dirt is positively charged has "no scientific merit or basis in fact." The water was also found by the lab not to be negatively charged or "structured in any fashion different from ordinary water."

The University of Utah also found that when the globe was under water, it could not become charged.

Despite these findings, Giani said people have sworn it works.

Mark Sumson of Springville is a distributor and user of the Laundry Solution.

Sumson said he cannot tell any difference between clothes cleaned with the Laundry Solution and clothes cleaned professionally.

Lepers mourn loss of Mother Teresa

CALCUTTA, India — Priests and nuns tried to shift the mood from one of loss to one of thanksgiving for the memory of Mother Teresa at the center she helped found in 1963 to accommodate men who wanted to join her in her work.

A center run by the Missionary Brothers of Charity helps those with leprosy. "These people are so valid here," said Brother Vinod, head of the leprosy center. "And outside, the people call them invalids."

Eighteen years ago, leprosy cost Ram Chander his job as a mechanic and driver. He had heard of the leprosy center and went there for treatment. He never left.

The center's products — shoes, bed sheets, sarongs, towels and bandages — are used by the Missionaries of Charity. Even the nuns' trademark saris are made by patients.

Aircraft sent to jam Bosnian radio

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon is sending three specialized aircrafts to Bosnia in an attempt to curb the violent rhetoric of Serb television and radio, a Pentagon spokesman said Thursday.

The EC-130E aircrafts, which are capable of broadcasting and jamming local radio and television waves, will be accompanied by about 120 crewmen, technicians, linguists and support personnel from a specialized Air Force National Guard unit in Harrisburg, Pa., said spokesman Col. Richard Bridges.

Local commanders in Bosnia with the NATO peacekeeping mission requested the aircrafts "in response to the perceived pattern of vehement rhetoric and incitement to violence" that has been broadcast on Serb television and radio, Bridges said.

White House makes clearance error

WASHINGTON — The White House and Secret Service are investigating whether a member of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights was briefly denied access to the White House because her name sounded foreign.

The Secret Service says an error by an access-control officer delayed Yvonne Lee at the White House gate Sept. 4.

White House spokesman Mike McCurry said Thursday that while the officer involved "regrets the error of judgment," the White House did not view the incident as a reflection of discrimination against Asian Americans.

In clearing Lee for entry, the clerk typed a computer command notifying White House guards that she needed to be escorted — a precaution often taken with non-citizens.

Officials are trying to determine whether the clerk made the error by assuming Lee was foreign or simply by mistyping the computer command.

Computer chip companies to merge

NEW YORK — Three major computer chip-making rivals are joining with the U.S. government in a partnership to work on dramatically shrink microprocessor circuits, an advance that could make computers 100 times faster.

The drive links commercial efforts by Intel Corp., Advanced Micro Devices Inc. and Motorola Corp. with three U.S. Department of Energy labs, including two that were formerly devoted to developing nuclear bombs.

The partnership plans to design a new technique for etching ever-tinier patterns in silicon chips, enabling more transistors to be crammed into each microprocessor. The technique employs ultra-violet light to etch lines smaller than one-thousandth the width of a strand of human hair.

In addition to making microprocessors 100 times more powerful, the companies said memory chips would be able to store 1,000 times more information than currently possible.

Intel, AMD and Motorola have formed a new company, called EUV LLC, that will invest $250 million over the next three years to push development of the "extreme ultraviolet lithography."

Branbury to enforce housing standards

By DEONYOUD
Universe Staff Writer

Branbury Park apartment complex is cracking down on residents in an attempt to abide by BYU housing standards.

The management and campus bishops have banded together to create a better Branbury Park. They acquired a legal declaration from Provo City stating Branbury Park is its own neighborhood. Along with this status is the right to have a community watch and a drug-free zone.

Bishop Jed Hixon leads the community watch program. Together with the Branbury management he has instituted a plan for residents to report violations of the Honor Code.

When a violation is witnessed, the resident should first confront the person. If that fails to work, a written statement can be turned over to the office.

The third step is for residents to contact their Relief Society, Elders Quorum or bishops.

The community action program began during the summer months and is now fully in place.

Branbury Park has hired a night watch officer to patrol the complex.

Also, with drug free signs in place, anyone convicted of possession of drugs is charged with a felony instead of the standard misdemeanor.

Residents of Branbury Park are receptive to the idea of a neighborhood watch, but many say the problem is not really as big as reputation suggests.

Ruth Cecil, a third year student at Utah Valley State College said Branbury gets a bad rap.

Most of the problem lies with management not caring what happens in the apartments, she said.

Some residents are afraid that the drug free signs aren't enough.

Brian Pratt, a sophomore at BYU, said he hadn't even noticed the signs. He said the management can't be responsible for everything, and residents need to choose for themselves how to act.

LAUNDRY from page 1

Giani said that since clothes can get moderately clean just by using warm water, "Clothes will get as clean using the globe as throwing a bucket of golf balls into your washing machine."

Sumson said that to get clothes really clean using the globe, a booster, available through the Laundry Solution, was needed.

According to Giani, people who have used the Laundry Solution have been upset at the labs' findings.

"People have been upset about our taking this stand. I apologize to people for being believers. All I am telling you is what the experts say. We don't want (TradeNet) to misrepresent what the ball does."

The division is also investigating another TradeNet product, the Super Globe.

This globe comes with an organic laundry aid and supposedly works in the same way the Laundry Solution does.

Giani said that if the Super Globe does not work like the company purports, then the division will make the public aware of the false claims.

RULING from page 1

They also sought access to church financial statements in order to investigate punitive damages.

In July, Raleigh County Circuit Judge H.L. Kirkpatrick ruled that would be too "oppressive and burdensome" on the church.

The Supreme Court ruled 4-1 to uphold Kirkpatrick's order that lawyers could ask church leaders in writing for any personal knowledge of the abuse and general information about the LDS Church and its relationship with the local congregation in Beckley. Chief Justice Margaret Workman was the lone dissenter.

Seeking full disclosure of church assets is not necessary unless punitive damages become an issue at trial, Kirkpatrick said.

The ruling does allow the woman's lawyers to make discovery requests in the future, said church lawyer Mike

Atkinson of Charleston.

The LDS Church has said none of its leaders in Utah knew of the abuse.

Church lawyers also said that by naming church officials, the woman hopes to embarrass the church into making a large settlement.

Don LeFevre, a church spokesman, said he was happy with the ruling but declined further comment on the lawsuit. Lawyers for the woman did not immediately return telephone messages Thursday.

The lawsuit has bounced between state and federal courts.

Originally filed in Raleigh County Circuit Court in 1996, the case was moved to federal court over questions about separation of church and state should be heard there.

U.S. District Judge Joseph Goodwin in April sent the case back to circuit court.

JOIN from page 1

The faiths involved in the effort are the American Baptist, Assembly of God, Disciples of Christ, Episcopal, Evangelical Lutheran Church of America, Presbyterian, Roman Catholic, Society of Friends (Quakers), United Church of Christ and United Methodist.

The several denominations want to work together for "social justice and the well-being of the community in Utah," said Bishop Carolyn Tanner Irish of the Episcopal Church.

Irish also added that the organization wants to network together to be mutually supportive of each other and address poverty, violence and ethical issues.

The CCU has made a covenant to preserve the faiths' standing in each Utah community and to share resources commonly in some areas. A news release from the CCU states that the churches will even "proclaim the Gospel boldly in each place and declare God's just will among the powers and principalities."

The different denominations are not combining completely, though. Irish stated that there will be no doctrinal statement issued because it is a communicative effort rather than a stand.

Settlement reached in Sears case

AMY LONG
Universe Staff Writer

State Attorney General
Sept. 3 that a settlement reached in a consumer fraud case.

But judgment resolves Sears for violating the state consumer protection according to Jeff Gray, who worked on the case.
Sears initiated with the Utah
Attorney General's office, Consumer

Attorney General for the settlement terms in the case, which stated that Sears give up to approximately $10 million in improperly collected consumer debts, repay at a rate of 10 percent in compensation to consumers and Sears must pay $10 million to each of the State Attorney General's offices for use in consumer protection as well as $5 million to benefit consumer education. Finally, Sears has agreed to stop its collection practices.

Sears release represents the first time a story that began in the Toledo, Ohio, Co. represented Drummond said.

Drummond, the company said it was at fault last the practice of extending the settlement terms in the case, which stated that

Cheryl B. Preston, prosecutor of the J. Reuben Clark firm, said the settlement agreement was reached after a debtor entered into after the Chapter 7 bankruptcy court for accrued

the agreements
with the court, she said. She remarked that the settlement had been filed.

Gray said. He added that the court that handled
the case had filed them.

many customers indebted through charge cards,
in they filed bankruptcy should have been discontinued.

customers to sign

the agreements which were not obligatory, Gray said. The department store told bankrupt customers that it would repossess goods purchased on credit that were not entirely paid off when bankruptcy was filed unless customers signed the agreements.

In practice, repossession does not happen very often, Drummond said.

Sears does have the right to repossess but would prefer to extend a "new but very modest line of credit,"
Drummond said.

Preston holds that Sears does not always have the right to repossess.
Credit card debts do not carry security of payment past bankruptcy. Sears tried to reaffirm personal responsibility for the debt through reaffirmation agreements, she added.

Sears faces several options when a customer files for chapter 7 bankruptcy with an unpaid balance on credit card purchases, according to Preston.

The company could take back the item. It could also eat the cost of the item. The company also has the option to work out a payment agreement with the debtor, Preston said.

Sears would rather sign reaffirmation agreements with customers than take back their purchases, Drummond said.

A debtor may choose to enter into a reaffirmation agreement for valid reasons, Preston said. After bankruptcy, few individuals have the money to pay the balance remaining on their possessions at once, Preston said.

If debtors want to keep the items,
they must either pay them off or agree with a creditor upon a payment schedule, according to Preston.

Debtors choosing to pay the balance on their possessions must only pay what the object is worth, Preston said.

For example, if a debtor bought a car worth $10,000 but their payment plan requires interest bringing the total payment to $15,000, the debtor would only need to finish paying the $10,000 in order to keep the car, Preston said.

A fair reaffirmation agreement would take into account the fact that debtors are only required to pay what the object is worth, Preston said.

According to Gray, Sears must "... re-vamp their collection practices," especially with regard to reaffirmation agreements.

Sears must also make monetary restitution to the customers who had signed invalid reaffirmation agreements, Gray said. The department store must pay back all money collected unlawfully, adding interest at a rate of 10 percent annually.

Sears is currently searching more than 5,000 records kept in various places to find customers who might be affected by the settlement, Drummond
said.

The company has so far located 146,000 such customers nationwide, and that number is expected to increase, Drummond said.

"We've got several different initiatives ongoing to help consumers," Drummond stated.

Drummond said that Sears is attributing the fact that they did not file affirmation agreements with the court to "...flawed legal judgment."
The company's lawyers are now at work ensuring that Sears fulfills all the requirements of the settlement,
Drummond said.

"(Our) Lawyers are working hard to defend the company, cooperate with the Attorney General's offices and pay the penalties," Drummond affirmed.

She further noted that Sears has been carefully following the law governing affirmation agreements since April 1, 1997.

The unlawful collections settlement covered all 50 states and a time period from January 1992 to April 1997, Gray said.

Gray suggests that consumers who think they may be one of those who participated in the invalid affirmation agreements call a hotline run by the Settlement Administrator for help in filing a claim. The number is 1 (800) 529-4500.

BYU students teach profess

By HILARY ROSS
Universe Staff Writer

BYU students are being invited to help professors improve their teaching. Students help by becoming involved in the Classroom Student Observer Program, which meets today at 4 p.m. in 107 HGB.

The CSOP is a program designed to improve the quality of education at BYU and to provide faculty members with information that helps them have a better sense of what is happening in their classes, said Kristin Hill, the student coordinator for the program.

Students spend about 5 to 10 hours a week observing classes, interviewing students in the classes, writing reports, talking with professors and performing any other activity that may be helpful to the professors, Hill said.

The program is offered to all instructors at the university. Faculty members from every college have participated.

Some professors invite students to observe their class many times throughout the semester, and other professors have students come in only once, Hill said.

One advantage of the program is that student observers aren't working for a grade, so their observations are objective, Hill said.

Another advantage is that students can offer a helpful perspective because they have seen a wide range of college teaching.

Student observers are trained by the Faculty Center to work in the program. The students are paid for their work, although some choose to volunteer their time, Hill said.

Hill has been involved in the program for one year. She said, "We don't evaluate the teachers. We're the student voice to tell them what students might think of the class. Our power comes from the fact that we're students."

Working in the CSOP gives students an opportunity to form unique relationships with the faculty.

"Working in the program has given me a chance to see the faculty members as human beings. They are not just people I take notes from. I see that they really care about the students," Hill said.

Many professors continue to participate in the program because they have seen positive results from it.

Jose L. Madrigal, an professor of statistics, has been in the CSOP for almost "The CSOP) is an gram. I have implemented the students' suggestions really helped my teaching," said.

Madrigal said he will use CSOP in the future.

Rachel Foster, a Massachusetts Information Systems, coordinator for the program.

"It is our honor to see that they may better enlighten the minds of students," Foster said.

To participate as an students must have at least and must have a sincere learning and teaching.

Interested students can get first information and training today at 4 p.m. in 107 HGB. Contact Rachel Foster at rmf@email.byu.edu for information.

Alumni House honors student grant recipients

By JENNY GIAUQUE
Universe Staff Writer

The BYU Alumni House honored the recipients of this year's Alumni Association Replenishment Grant at a luau dinner Wednesday night.

George Bowie, executive director of the Alumni Association, spoke to the recipients about the honor of receiving the grant and what he hopes the future will bring. Bowie explained how the grant was developed.

He said the board of directors at the Alumni Association wanted to do something wonderful for students who were already at BYU. Directors built the Replenishment Endowment to help students who excel in school but are in financial need.

The fund is now near $350,000. Bowie said directors plan to continue to build the fund so that more students can be helped in the future.

Brian Miller, vice president of the Student Alumni Association, is one of the recipients of the Replenishment Grant.

Miller said he is extremely grateful for the scholarship and plans to give as much service to the university and his fellow students as he possibly can.

The dinner was centered around a Hawaiian luau theme.

Roxanne Olsen, President of SAA and a scholarship recipient, spoke on the importance of giving to others.

Between remarks, the performing group Aloha Islanders performed traditional Hawaiian songs and dances to complete the luau atmosphere.

In his concluding remarks, Bowie congratulated the students while reminding them of the responsibility the scholarship brings.

He said students are expected to aid the university and others in return for the replenishment grant in the future. He said he hopes students will make service a pattern in life.

Bowie said students must plan for the future but enjoy the present.

"These are the times we shall dream about and call them the good old days," Bowie said, quoting a poem.

Students can benefit from the replenishment grant now and in the future, he said.

News industries' trends are changing

By MAUREEN JONES
Universe Staff Writer

The newspaper industry is not dead or even wounded, the chief executive officer of Times Mirror Company said in the Communications symposium Thursday.

The Times Mirror Company is a Los Angeles-based news and information company that publishes such newspapers as The Los Angeles Times and The Baltimore Sun.

Mark H. Willes, CEO, chairman of the board and president of Times Mirror, said the circulation of newspapers across the country is down because the newspaper industry has not attempted to run the industry correctly in the past.

"A newspaper needs to be factual, truthful and balanced to be a world-class paper," he said.

Willes said he thinks the trend of newspapers adding an online site in addition to their newsprint has a good side and some drawbacks. The online version of newspapers allows the paper to furnish more detail to its readers.

He said advertising on the Internet is not as effective as in the print version because everyday items have a hard time advertising on the Internet.

He said he personally thinks the Internet is more important to the business-oriented rather than the people who seek it for reading material.

By working on incorporating integrity, independence and imagination in the newspapers the Times

Mirror publishes, the circulation of the newspapers has increased, he said.

Willes said journalists should try to impact the world in a thoughtful and comprehensive way.

"(A reporter's job) is to improve the performance of society by sharing truth and understanding," Willes said.

He said that the newspapers should not only inform people but also work to give a shared sense of community.

The Garrens, the brainchild of a freshman in Deseret Towers in 1992, perform a variety show of improvised comedy sketches and songs. Originally a BYU club, the troupe became an independent business in 1994.

Audiences who have seen the show in the past may find their opinions of the troupe different in the new season.

The Garrens members change frequently as students come and go. This season's stage includes two professional performers from outside the BYU community. There is also a Garrens workshop in which aspiring performers polish their abilities until they are ready to break into the spot-

"Despite what anyone says, I think the Garrens are just going to get better and better," Hoppe said.

Joyce Garren, Hall Advisor for Q-Hall in Deseret Towers where a few of the group's original members lived and were inspired with a troupe name, would agree.

"I am their biggest fan," she said. "They are a very talented group."

Most people in the audience can relate to at least some of the parodies of a Garrens show. Whether the boy and girl holding hands in the audience are freshmen from the dorms or married and living in Orem, they will see the life they live played up to its most ridiculous on stage.

Tonight's show includes "Guys' Apartment," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde Buy a Cat," "Bureaucracy 472" and "Hold On, the Light Will Change."

The Student Leadership Involvement Center has contracted for the Garrens to perform Friday evenings in 205 JRCB at 7:30 and 9:15. Tickets cost $4 and $5.

ZCMI, Vogue to host benefit fashion show

By EMELY ARROYO
Universe Staff Writer

Vogue and ZCMI are hosting a luncheon and fall fashion show Saturday to benefit the Salt Lake County Medical Society Alliance.

The fund-raiser is used to provide scholarships for medical students and to support various health promotions.

"We offer three $1,500 scholarships to fourth year medical students who are graduates of Salt Lake County high schools. These scholarships are need-based," said Julie Enslin, president of the Salt Lake County Medical Society Alliance.

Funds are also used to support "Here to Help," a program that sends physicians' spouses to high schools to discuss teen pregnancy with students; "Choices," a program that allows volunteers to go to area high school health classes and talk about abuse; and "Building Blocks" a program that gives volunteers the opportunity to teach a parenting class to female inmates at the Utah State Prison.

Proceeds will also go to support the South Valley Sanctuary Abused Women & Children's Shelter and the Cancer Wellness House.

"One fun part of the show is when physician models join the professional models on the runway. Most people think it is amusing to see their doctor on the catwalk," Enslin said.

Tickets cost $25 and can be reserved by calling 801-579-6656. The luncheon begins at 11:30 a.m. in the Little America Hotel Ballroom in Salt Lake.

Running to the top: The 1997 women's cross country team is ranked second in Sports Illustrated's pre-season poll. This years team includes a new crop of talented freshmen and transfer students. They host the BYU Autumn Classic Oct. 18th.

Cross country opens with meet in Idaho

By Christian Martin
Universe Sports Writer

After finishing third in the NCAA Cross Country Championships last year, and already ranked second to start 1997, the BYU women's team is preparing for even greater success this season.

The team returns its top runners with All-Americans Courtney Pugmire, a junior, Maggie Chan, a junior, and Elizabeth Jackson, a sophomore.

The past recruiting year added yet more firepower with some highly touted freshmen being added to the squad.

These new freshman, alone, could probably be a top 10 team nationally, said BYU Coach Patrick Shane. This is the best year of recruiting that BYU has had in Cross Country.

The new freshman are, Andrea Neipp from Palmdale, Calif., Sarah Gardner from Salt Lake City, Tara Rohatinsky from Provo, Sarah Ellis from Altadena, Calif., Emily Lawson from Fresno, Calif., Lindsey Argyle from American Fork, Sharolyn Shields from Calgary, Canada, Jill Rencher from West Linn, Ore., JoLee Gillespie from Colorado Springs, Colo., and Whitney Bushnell from Philomath, Ore.

"I had a strong feeling BYU was where I belonged," said Neipp who ran the fastest 3K time in the nation by a prep athlete last year.

Two transfer students were also added with Emily Nay, who was the number two runner for the University of Arizona last year, and Kara Ormand, who was the 1996 national junior college champion at Ricks College. Either could have transferred to almost any school they wanted, given their credentials.

"I couldn't see myself anywhere else," said Ormand.

The talented cross country team goes through a rigorous training schedule, putting in at least 20 hours a week.

"It can be a little lonely at times, and you have to be willing to stay focused and motivated," Shane said. "Runners have to be real self starters."

A team receiving a number two ranking from Sports Illustrated might tend to feel a little pressure, but Shane said the team is not thinking about it.

"We don't talk about it. We're going to focus on the process, not the outcome."

The Cougar women are at the College of Southern Idaho Invitational today.

BYU's soccer team hungry to improve on winless record Saturday night

By BO FUHRMAN
Sports Writer

BYU's soccer team, after their first win of the season, is excited about the field again and working on another national club. They are excited. They love the game, and they come out to play. Soccer coach Chris Watkins, a young coach, said, "The team isn't there yet, but it's a lot of effort. They're going to get that experience." The team's enthusiasm comes from the opening schedule. They play top 20 teams on the road. The team has an 0-3-1 record. The team's increased will to win. The team's two top of our schedule is to win. The team's now start, the attitude is confident. "The team is excited and just waiting anytime we have a chance to win ourselves excited for the next game."

that," said Brian Jolley, a senior goalkeeper and co-captain of this year's team. Watkins said the team focused especially this week on finishing the scoring opportunities they get. "The guys have really been working hard this week on shooting. We've been working on it for the last two hours and all the guys were out here early taking shots. That part of the game will come," Watkins said. He added that team defense was also a key point they were working on this week. "I think sometimes we give the opposition a couple feet when they should only have a couple of inches of room. We spent all day Tuesday working on defense and making sure everyone knows who they should be guarding and when," Watkins said.

This year, however, the team is a little more patient with their improvement. As defending national club champions, the Cougars already have an automatic bid to the national tournament, which takes the pressure off the team on having to win the league to go advance. "We don't have to win today," Watkins said. "We have to make sure we're better come late November. It might cost us a couple losses here and there, but the bottom line is we want to win the national championship, and that's what we're working the whole year to do." The next team the Cougars will play will be National College, an NAIA team that will play at 9 p.m. on Saturday. "We don't know that much about them," said Jeremy Humphries, a co-captain and junior midfielder. "Their coach claims to have a really good team, but we're going out there to win a ball game." Watkins expects an exciting and well-played game. "They've got a lot of international players, and BYU's team is well known for its international players. It should be a unique game and a very interesting game to watch," Watkins said.

Wallflowers, Crows thrill audience

By CHRIS PETERSON

band Gigolo Aunts.

The Wallflowers followed the opening act, performing nearly every song off their current release "Bringing Down The Horse." Son of legend Bob Dylan, Jakob Dylan brought the crowd to its feet even while performing the Wallflowers' moody hit "6th Avenue Heartache." Dylan and his cohorts played for almost an hour, finishing off with their song "One Headlight." The crowd wouldn't let them end and requested an encore which the Wallflowers happily supplied.

Counting Crows took the stage to play what some concert-goers described as a more mellow Counting Crows. On the road for a year on the "Recovering the Satellites" tour, along with a year and a half of touring for their debut CD "August and Everything After," Duritz has had plenty of time to adapt and rearrange songs the band has played for years.

Duritz displayed his love for story telling through his lyrics by acting out the songs' ideas through hand gestures and facial expressions.

Half-way through the set, the band turned its focus to an acoustic set that included the use of an accordion, a steel guitar, a mandolin, acoustic guitars and a percussion set, bringing the drummer out from behind his traditional drum kit. The band played a mellow and moody version of its upbeat hit "Mr. Jones" during the acoustic set.

The second half of the set presented some of the more hard-edged songs on the latest album. Counting Crows ended its encore with the ballad "Long December."

Y students, faculty face traffic en route to SLC extension center

By JULIANNE PFUNDER
Universe Staff Writer

Construction woes for students and professors en route to classes includes more than the future library and the improved Ernest L. Wilkinson Center. Many students and faculty face the massive reconstruction of I-15 on their way to and from class.

Besides students who travel from North of Utah County to Provo, some students travel from Utah County to the BYU Salt Lake Center. The extension of BYU campus in Salt Lake offers various classes at various times to facilitate the needs of students.

Todd Foshee, a senior from Orem, said he attends the extension because it is closer to his work, it is easier to get night classes and the classes are smaller.

"Because of the smaller classes, it seems easier to approach the teacher and get one-on-one instruction," Foshee said.

All of the students who spoke with The Daily Universe agreed that the benefits of the Salt Lake Center outweighed the I-15 construction. Most just found the construction irritating.

"The thing that's irritating is I-15 is torn up and then every other road off of I-15 is torn up too," said Dan Ruth, a senior from Orem.

Lee Glings, BYU Salt Lake Center Director said, "There are many, carpools that students from Provo participate in."

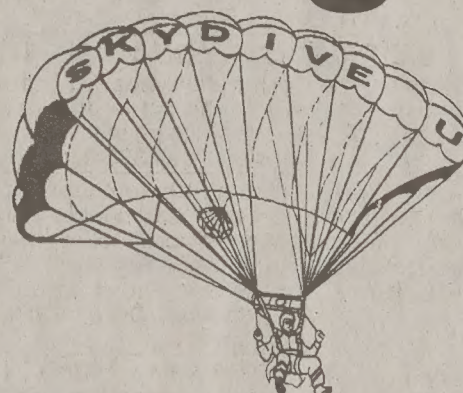

Glins also said that the extension and the Utah Transit Authority have tried to work out a special bus route for the center.

"UTA was very willing to work out a bus route, but because their resources were stretched so thin they were unable to," Glins said.

Currently, there are no special programs to help accommodate the commuting students. Glins suggested that a car pool board be put into effect with the help of the student association.

Kaufman said anytime you have bloody diarrhea or dehydration, especially when accompanied by a fever, you should see a doctor.

As with most illnesses, Kaufman suggests drinking plenty of fluids.

One of the main causes of foodborne illnesses, according to Kaufman, is eating meat — especially ground meats and roast beef — that is not fully cooked.

She said people should avoid eating meat that has any pink in it and sug-

David Banks, a medical technologist at Talbert Medical Center in Orem, suggests washing counters, cutting boards, sponges and rags thoroughly between the preparation of meat products and other foods, such as vegetables. This measure helps prevent the cross-contamination of other foods that may not be cooked as well.

Banks also suggests that special attention be given to keeping creamy spreads, such as salad dressings and mayonnaise, refrigerated to avoid the growth of harmful bacteria.

Kaufman and Dr. Larry J. Wright, an associate at LDS Hospital, will be

PEACE, PLEASE: Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat raises his hand in a peace sign at Itahadia palace. Arafat and U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright have been discussing efforts this week in Jerusalem to reduce terrorism in the Middle East.

Albright, Arafat discuss peace

Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Secretary of State Madeleine Albright urged Israel on Thursday to suspend expansion of Jewish settlements after extracting a pledge from Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat to confront the terrorist "enemies of peace."

The unexpected U.S. demand followed Albright's appeal to Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu on Wednesday to turn over to the Palestinian Authority $67 million in taxes withheld from Palestinian workers and ease restrictions placed on Palestinians' travel after a series of suicide bombings.

While Albright and her aides have insisted Arafat should not expect a trade-off for acting against terrorists on the West Bank and in Gaza, her demands on Israel was part of the give-and-take Albright said peacemaking required.

At a joint news conference with Arafat, Albright said she still had not found a way to restart Middle East peace talks.

Albright said she and Arafat "have an agreement that terrorists are terrible." She reserved judgment on his ability to counter terrorism over the long term.

Albright plans further talks today with Arafat in Ramallah and with Netanyahu in Jerusalem. Arafat blamed Israel for the impasse in the peace talks and said Palestinians were still committed to the 4-year-old peace process.

"I want to reiterate that the Palestinian Authority will meet all its responsibilities, and I hope the Israeli government will do the same," Arafat said.

Besides demanding that Arafat dismantle the operations of Hamas and other militant groups on the West Bank and in Gaza, she is urging Netanyahu to make some gestures to the Palestinians.

Netanyahu has declined to turn over to the Palestinian Authority $67 million in taxes withheld from Palestinian workers or to ease the restrictions he has imposed on Palestinians' travel.

"There is nothing as dastardly as suicide bombers," Albright said in condemning the attacks on Israel that have claimed 25 lives in the last six weeks, including the suicide bombers, and more than 150 since Arafat signed a peace accord with Israel in September 1993.

"I offer my condolences to the Israeli people and the government, the people who fell victim to terrorist activities in Jerusalem," Arafat said. "I say enough violence. This is time for peace."

Senate approves student testing

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate Thursday overwhelmingly approved a modified version of President Clinton's student testing program, but required that assessments be put under a politically balanced national board instead of the Education Department.

The proposal to offer math and reading tests still had dim prospects in the House, where there was opposition from both parties. A House vote was expected Wednesday.

By an 88-12 vote, the Senate agreed to the compromise as an amendment to an $80 billion spending bill for the Labor, Education, and Health and Human Services departments. The no votes came from conservative Republicans, who say the tests will lead to federal control of what children learn.

Republican supporters of national tests say they will be voluntary and enable parents to evaluate their local schools.

The reading tests for fourth graders and math tests for eighth graders were the top item in Clinton's 10-point plan for education announced in his State of the Union address in February. States and school districts would be free to decide whether to give the tests, which would be given first in March 1999.

"The measure they have embraced will help parents ensure their children have mastered the basics of reading and math," Clinton said after the Senate vote. "This is another example of what can happen when people of good will of both parties ... look to the future and not to the past."

The administration said the exams would let parents know how their children and schools perform when measured against a uniform standard that could be compared internationally. Most standard tests now rate students in comparison with the norm, or average score on the test.

The testing plan has fallen victim in the House to a mix of opponents.

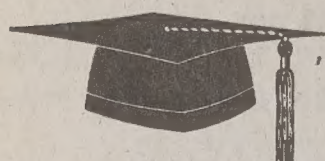

Black and Hispanic members were particularly concerned, because many minority group members attend poorly funded schools where achievement is low. Low test results would brand those students as inferior, civil rights advocates worry. The Education Department has also said it would not give the reading test in Spanish.

"The administration has a good deal of work to do in reaching an understanding on the testing issue with both the majority party and significant elements within the Democratic Caucus as well," said Rep. David Obey of Wisconsin, senior Democrat on the Appropriations Committee and a supporter of testing.

Republicans don't want the Education Department to control the program. Many would-be supporters worried that such political control would lead to weak standards relying on educational fads rather than basic skills.
